THE PROBLEM

The information exists. But does anyone know where it is?

Most families have the paperwork somewhere. When someone ends up in the hospital or passes away suddenly, the person who knew where everything was is often the one nobody can ask.

Which accounts exist?

Checking and savings, a 401(k) or IRA, life insurance, the subscription still charging a card every month.

Who should we call?

The doctor, the attorney, the accountant, the insurance agent, and the people who should hear it from family first.

Where are the important documents?

The will, the power of attorney, the health care directive, the deed, the car title.

What would they have wanted?

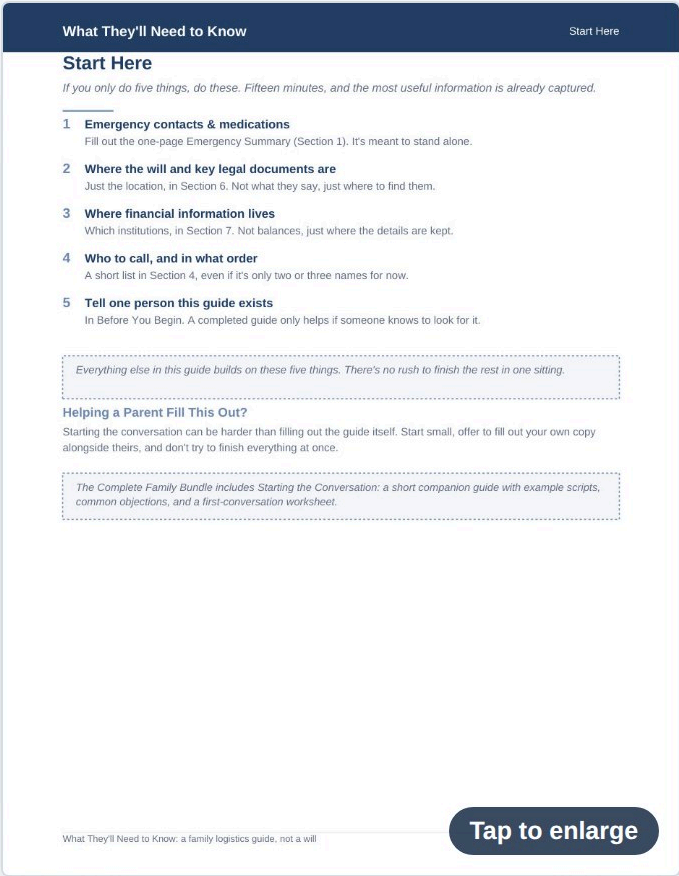

Their care, their service, and the things they meant to say but never wrote down.

What They'll Need to Know

One organized place for the practical information your family may someday need: who to call, where the documents are, which accounts exist, and what you'd want. You fill it in calmly, ahead of time, so nobody has to piece it together in a crisis.

Short on time? Start with five things.

1. Emergency contacts and medications
2. Where the will and legal documents are
3. Where financial information lives
4. Who to call, and in what order
5. Tell one person the guide exists

Designed to keep sensitive details out. The guide asks you not to write passwords, PINs, Social Security numbers, or full account numbers in it. It records where that information is kept.

One connected system: talk, organize, act.

The main guide is where the information lives. Two companion guides cover what comes before it and what comes after: getting a parent to start, and knowing what to do when something happens.

Starting the Conversation

- A guide to starting practical, low-pressure conversations with your parent.

 - ✓ Help for siblings and long-distance families

What They'll Need to Know

- THE CORE GUIDE
- Organize contacts, documents, accounts, and wishes in one place.
- ✓ Twelve sections and an emergency summary
 - ✓ Where the will, policies, and accounts are kept
 - ✓ An updates log to keep it current

What Happens Next

- An emergency and first-week action guide.
- ✓ What to do in a medical emergency
 - ✓ The first hours, first 24 hours, and days 2-7
 - ✓ What can safely wait

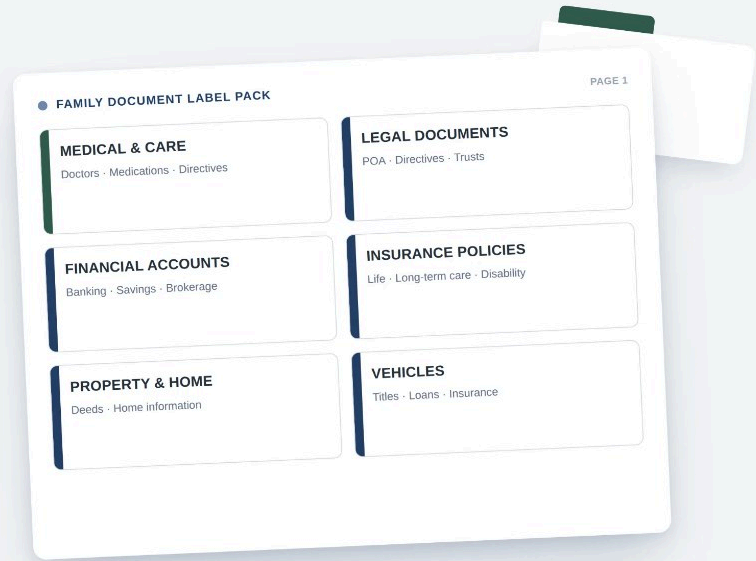

How they work together

Starting the Conversation helps you sit down with your parent. What They'll Need to Know is what you fill in together. What Happens Next is the checklist your family reaches for on the hard day, and it points back to the right section of the main guide at each step.

Family Document Label Pack

Printable labels for folders, binders & document boxes
Organize the papers behind your guide — not just the information inside it.

Part of the What They'll Need to Know family preparedness system

BONUS

Family Document Label Pack

Printable, color-coded labels for folders, binders, and document boxes. They match the main guide's categories, so the paper originals are as easy to find as the information written about them.

Print the PDF on regular paper, or on full-sheet adhesive label paper (US letter) and cut along the borders.
